Broughton Junior School has presented a detailed profile of evidence that demonstrates they are Excelling across all eight competencies of the School Mental Health Award. The school has used the framework and content of the Award to good effect to develop their mental health and wellbeing strategies, structures and practices. The award framework has enabled the school to draw together the provision in the school and really understand the broader picture. It has particularly encouraged them to focus on provision for staff.

The school has biannual wellbeing questionnaires but have done extra over lockdown.

The pupil surveys have fed into the provision, the surveys have given the school a huge amount of data to work with, to identify different groups that might be struggling, and these were shared with the teachers and governor's body. In many cases those that were identified as struggling already had support in place. The surveys also highlighted that pupils did not feel listened to, as a consequence the school now has a pupil parliament. This has been incredibly successful and very empowering. It was also an opportunity to remind pupils what support is available. The school has many things in place to support children, but the head teacher felt that the Peer mentoring programme with Bucks Mind has been really successful.

The role of the wellbeing officer was also highlighted as an important part of supporting the whole community and the wellbeing team were extremely proud of how the role has grown and developed and what the school can now offer as a result of this. The wellbeing officer is available on the playground both in the morning and afternoon for parents, which they have really embraced. Parents really appreciate that the school supports the children in many different ways, ultimately this has resulted in an improvement in behaviour and a reduction in complaints. It has created another avenue of support and communication for the whole community whenever they need it. The school aims to be honest and transparent in their communication with parents. There are lots of opportunities (pre-Covid-19) for parents to engage with the school and parents are able to share their views. The school have run a wide range of workshops to support both their own and their children's mental health. Parental engagement is really high.

The staff wellbeing team was a grassroots initiative and has organically grown and is very representative. In addition, this has been supported by the governors with a financial investment. The wellbeing team requested some flexible working with a wellbeing day. Whilst it is clear that the head supports flexible working, the leadership team researched this and felt that it would be most effective to offer teachers a late start or early finish one day a week. In addition, the performance management cycle is really robust and the school values ambition and is prepared to invest in their staff to encourage progress. It is clear that there is an open-door policy, and that support is easily accessible within school. One of the leads discussed how much of a supportive and friendly place the school is to work. This sense of trust, safety and feeling looked after is reflected in the wellbeing survey.

The school works with a number of external agencies. In particular the school does a lot of work with Bucks Mind, where they do coffee mornings to discuss mental health with parents and peer mentoring. There is a play therapist in the school who works with both children and the adults in the school. They have good links with family support. The school has worked hard to find support where it is needed.

The school is really proud of being one of the founding schools of the Well School Movement run by the Youth Sports Trust. The school was approached to partake because of the work that has already gone on in the school to support wellbeing. They are sharing their best practice through this initiative. In addition, one of the leads presents and shares the work in the school in national media, has written books, and runs training and workshops. More locally other members of staff are working with the infant school, and peer mentors were on the local radio. It would be good to see more staff sharing best practice across these platforms.

It is really clear that the school works collaboratively to ensure that their provision is as effective as possible. I have no hesitation in concurring with the self-assessment made by the school and recommending Broughton Junior School to be awarded the Carnegie Centre of Excellence for Mental Health in Schools School Mental Health Award at Gold standard.
